Snow forecast - Monday 8 April 2013

An unsettled week with snow (and rain) at times.

Detailed forecast:

Austria

Tuesday will start dry and bright, but snow (1100m) will reach the far west later in the day. Wednesday will be mostly cloudy with scattered snow showers (1200m) especially in the west. The best of the sunshine will be further east.

Thursday will be mostly dry but milder with just the odd shower in the west (snow 1800m). It will remain unsettled on Friday with further showers (snow 1600m) but also some drier brighter spells.

France

Tuesday may start dry, but cloud will thicken to bring further snow (1200-1400m) to many parts, heaviest in the northern Alps. Wednesday will be mostly dry, but probably rather cloudy.

On Thursday a warm front will bring further bad weather, but the rain/snow limit will rise to over 2200m or higher. It will remain unsettled on Friday with snow falling to lower levels (1300m) once more.

Italy

Tuesday will be mostly cloudy with scattered snow flurries (1200m) and some more persistent snow in the far west later in the day. Wednesday will be mostly dry with sunny spells.

Thursday will be mostly dry in the eastern Alps, but some rain (snow 1800m+) will affect the far west later in the day. It will remain unsettled on Friday with further rain/snow (1600m) mostly in the west.

Switzerland

Tuesday should start dry, but snow (1200m) will reach western parts during the morning, spreading slowly east later. Wednesday will be mostly dry with sunny spells and just the odd snow flurry (1200m).

Thursday will be mostly cloudy, but much milder with rain to 2200m or higher,
