Snow forecast

Updated: 1.15pm Friday 21 February 2014

Following today's snow (which chiefly concerns the north-western Alps) the weather is going to settle down for a while with lots of fine weather in the forecast over the next 2 or 3 days. With the sun beginning to strengthen now it will feel spring-like at times, particularly on south-facing slopes.

However, next week it will gradually turn more unsettled with early signs of a proper return to winter next weekend. Watch this space...

Detailed forecast:

Austria

Saturday will start cloudy for most with showers and a little snow above 600-800m. However, drier, brighter weather in the far west will spread to other parts of the Austrian Alps as the day goes on.

Sunday will be mostly dry with unbroken sunshine in the west of the country, some cloud further east. It will feel mild again, particularly in the northern Alps.

Monday will be mostly sunny and very mild everywhere.

France

Saturday will start sunny (and remain sunny in the southern French Alps). Further north, however, it will turn a little cloudier later in the day with the odd snow flurry (800m) possible.

Sunday and Monday will be dry, mostly sunny and quite mild.

Italy

Saturday may start cloudy in the Dolomites. Further west it will be sunny and this brighter weather will extend to all parts later in the day.

Sunday and Monday will then be sunny and mild.

Plenty of sun in Alta Badia today – with more to come over the next few days.

Switzerland

Saturday will be mostly sunny to start with, but cloud will increase in the northern Alps with the odd shower possible later (snow 800m). Most places will however stay dry.

Sunday and Monday will be dry with long sunny spells and mild temperatures.

It will gradually turn unsettled again as we move through next week, with at least a little snow for most and the possibility of a more serious return to winter next weekend.
