Snow forecast

Updated: 8.30pm Thursday 6 March 2014

After a very unsettled couple of months the weather is finally settling down with a lengthy spell of fine spring weather for all regions. This means largely clear and cold by night, but feeling quite warm by day, particularly in the afternoons and on slopes exposed to the sun.

Detailed forecast:

Austria

Sunshine will dominate the weather over the next few days with cold mornings but increasingly warm afternoons. Maximum day time temperatures in St Anton (1300m), for example, are expected to be around 8 to 10°C over the next few days.

France

Expect lots of sunshine over the next days with chilly nights but warm days – especially in the afternoon. Maximum day time temperatures are expected to reach 10 to 12°C in Morzine (1000m), for example, over the next few days.

Italy

Unbroken sunshine is forecast for most Italian resorts over the coming days – feeling chilly at night but warm by day, particularly on south-facing slopes. Maximum temperatures are expected to reach 7 to 9°C in Selva (1500m), for example, over the next few days.

Switzerland

Like everywhere else in the Alps, sunshine will dominate over the next few days with cold nights and relatively warm days. Maximum temperatures are expected to reach 7 to 9°C in Zermatt (1600m), for example, over the next few days.

Outlook:

Remaining settled with plenty of sunshine for the foreseeable future.
