Snow forecast

Updated: 9.50pm Monday 10 March 2014

With high pressure still dominant across the Alps all areas can expect plenty more warm sunshine this week. There are, however, signs of a breakdown from the north over the weekend with a chance of a little snow in places. At this stage this is most likely across the north-eastern Alps, with a more general return to winter possible by the middle of next week. However, this is a long way off so stay tuned...

Detailed forecast:

Austria

The rest of the week will be mostly sunny with chilly nights and warm afternoons. Maximum temperatures in Lech (1400m) will be around 9 to 10°C.

---

France

The rest of the week will be mostly sunny with chilly nights and warm afternoons. Maximum temperatures in Chamonix (1000m) will be around 14 to 15°C.

Italy

The rest of the week will be mostly sunny with chilly nights and warm afternoons. Maximum temperatures in Cortina (1200m) will be around 10 to 11°C.

---

Switzerland

The rest of the week will be mostly sunny with chilly nights and warm afternoons. Maximum temperatures in Zermatt (1600m) will be around 9 to 10°C.

---

Outlook:

It will turn cooler and more unsettled over the weekend with a few showers possible in the north, more specifically the north-eastern Alps. More on this as the week progresses...
