Snow forecast

Updated: 2.15pm Friday 28 March 2014

With pressure relatively high across the Alps, there will be plenty of fine weather over the next few days. This means a typical freeze-thaw cycle with chilly nights/mornings but warm afternoons. The weather is expected to turn a little more unsettled mid-week with a few showers in places, particularly in the south-western Alps. At this stage, however, it looks like many places will remain dry.

Detailed forecast:

Austria

Saturday will be sunny and warm by the afternoon with a maximum temperature of around 11°C in Lech (1450m) and 16°C in Kitzbühel (760m). Little change on Sunday with temperatures climbing a degree or so higher.

On Monday a little patchy cloud is possible in places, particularly in the afternoon, but essentially it will be another fine, warm day.

France

Saturday will be bright but the sunshine may be a little hazy at times due to high cloud. Afternoon temperatures will peak at around 16°C in Morzine (1000m) and 8°C in Val d'Isère (1850m).

There will be very little change on Sunday and Monday, though the temperature might creep up a fraction.

Italy

Saturday will be bright with mostly unbroken sunshine in the eastern Italian Alps, but high cloud at times in the west. Maximum temperatures are expected to reach 15°C in Courmayeur (1225m) and 10°C in Selva (1565m).

There will be little change on Sunday or Monday, with temperatures perhaps a degree or so higher.

Switzerland

Saturday will be mostly sunny though some high cloud will make it rather hazy at times. Temperatures are expected to reach 11°C in Zermatt (1620m) and 9°C in St Moritz (1780m).

There will be very little change on Sunday and Monday with plenty of sunshine and just a little cloud here and there. Temperatures will also creep up a degree or two.

Outlook:

Many places will remain fine mid-week but there will be an increase in cloud amounts with one or two showers in places. The area at highest risk of these right now would seem to be the south-western Alps.
