Snow forecast

Updated: 1.30pm Friday 11 April 2014

There will be plenty of warm sunshine over the next few days, but also a scattering of showers, most frequent in Austria on Sunday. However, no significant snow is expected until (possibly) the end of next week.

Detailed forecast:

Austria

Saturday will be mostly dry with sunny spells and just isolated showers (snow 2300m). Showers will become more widespread on Sunday, most frequent in the north, with the rain/snow level falling to 1600m in places.

On Monday a few showers will linger in the northern Alps (snow 1500m), but most places will be dry with sunny spells.

France

Saturday will see sunny spells and some well scattered showers, mostly in the afternoon with a little snow above 2300m. Sunday will see a little cloud in the northern Alps at first then most places will be dry, sunny and warm. Monday will also be sunny and warm.

Italy

Saturday, Sunday and Monday will be mostly dry with sunny spells and just isolated showers (snow 2200m).

Switzerland

Saturday will see a mix of sunny spells and a few well scattered afternoon showers (snow 2300m). A few showers (snow 1900m) will linger in the far east on Sunday, otherwise most regions will be dry with sunny spells. Monday should be dry, sunny and warm everywhere.

Outlook:

It should be mostly warm, dry and sunny mid-week but it may turn cooler and more unsettled later. Stay tuned to weathertoski.co.uk.
