Snow forecast

Updated: 5pm Friday 18 April 2014

The weekend weather will be very mixed with some sunny spells but also occasional showers. The showers will be most frequent in the southern Alps on Saturday, with some significant snow in places. However most Alpine regions will not see any substantial new snow over the weekend and temperatures will rise again on Sunday.

Detailed forecast:

Austria

Saturday will begin mostly cloudy with showers in places (snow 1600-1800m) but these will soon be confined to the eastern Austrian Alps with sunny spells developing in most other areas. Sunday will see sunny spells and scattered showers, mostly in the south and east (snow 1600-1800m).

Mixed weather conditions for the Alps this weekend. This is Pass Thurn near Kitzbühel.

France

Saturday will see variable cloud, some sunshine, but also scattered showers, most likely in the afternoon and close to the Italian border with a rain/snow limit around 1200-1500m. Sunday will be milder, but still rather cloudy with the risk of the odd shower (snow 1800m).

Italy

Saturday will be mostly cloudy with showers or longer spells of snow (1100-1400m) with some significant falls in places. The weather will remain variable on Sunday, but any showers will be lighter and more scattered with snow only above 1800m.

Switzerland

Saturday will see variable cloud cover and showers (snow 1000-1500m), mostly light and well scattered in the northern Swiss Alps, but heavier and more prolonged closer to the Italian border with the chance of some significant snow in places. Sunday will be warmer with just the occasional shower (snow 1800m) again most likely in the far south.

---

Outlook:

The first half of next week looks like being fairly mild, with sunny spells and occasional showers (a little snow above 2200m in places).
